Geometrics cesium vapour magnetometers with a sensitivity of 0.005 nT, installed in the tail boom, were used to collect the magnetic measurements. These measurements were then processed to produce the residual magnetic field map. The map was generated using software that interpolates the data points to create a continuous field over the study area. The residual magnetic field map was subsequently digitized and gridded for further analysis and interpretation.